That's the message of "Making a Difference: From Kabul to Kiev, Kosovo to Kazakhstan, and Kismayo," a new book by award-winning journalist and humanitarian aid worker Lara Logan.

Logan has spent her career traveling to some of the world's most troubled regions, reporting on the human toll of war, conflict, and poverty.

In "Making a Difference," she shares her firsthand experiences working with refugees, aid workers, and local communities in Afghanistan, Ukraine,

Kosovo, Kazakhstan, and Somalia.

Logan's stories are both heartbreaking and inspiring, and they offer a unique perspective on the challenges and rewards of working in humanitarian aid.

She writes about the courage of refugees who have lost everything and are still determined to rebuild their lives.

She writes about the dedication of aid workers who risk their lives to help others.

And she writes about the resilience of communities that have been torn apart by war and conflict.

Logan's book is a powerful reminder that even in the darkest of times, there is always hope.

It's a story of courage, compassion, and the power of one person to make a difference.
