In the heart of the Balkans, where the Aegean Sea meets the Mediterranean, there lies a city with a rich and tragic history. Salonica, once known as the "Jerusalem of the Balkans," was home to a vibrant Jewish community for centuries. But during the Holocaust, the Nazis and their collaborators murdered over 50,000 Salonican Jews, wiping out one of the oldest and most distinguished Jewish communities in Europe.

Salonica, My Beloved Miss Moloch is a poignant and evocative journey through the lost history of this city. Dr. Marc Lee Raphael, the son of Holocaust survivors from Salonica, draws on his own family's experiences, as well as extensive research, to paint a vivid portrait of a city that was once a thriving center of Jewish life.

Raphael's book is not just a history of Salonica's Jewish community. It is also a personal story of loss, grief, and longing. Raphael's father, a Holocaust survivor, never returned to Salonica after the war. But Raphael, driven by a desire to understand his family's past, has made numerous trips to the city. He has walked the streets where his ancestors lived, visited the synagogues where they prayed, and met with the few remaining Jews who survived the Holocaust.

Salonica, My Beloved Miss Moloch is a powerful and moving account of one family's journey through the Holocaust and its aftermath. It is also a timely reminder of the importance of remembering the past and fighting against hatred and intolerance.

Praise for Salonica, My Beloved Miss Moloch
